Overview

This site is an interactive medical journal club where health care professionals can go to discuss articles published in the medical literature. The site was created in 1995 by Dr. Michael Jacobson who periodically summarises articles from the medical literature and puts them up on the site. He adds his own comments about the articles and then invites readers to give their feedback, an intrinsic part of the journal club. In addition, a number of authors of the articles reviewed have participated in the discussions. The articles discussed are primarily in the field of adult internal medicine and are searchable by subject.

Content

The site is very simple to navigate and appears to be popular with the healthcare community, boasting 3,000 visitors per week. Journal Club also alerts visitors by email when new summaries are posted on the site.
